Programme prévisionnel / Pre-Program

Les activités archéologiques ont connu un large développement ces dernières années dans les territoires qui jouxtent la mer Caspienne méridionale, l'Azerbaïdjan, l'Iran, le Turkménistan et le Kazakhstan. Ces régions présentent aujourd'hui encore une grande diversité environnementale et culturelle, résultat de milliers d'années d'interactions entre populations d'origine et cultures différentes. La mer Caspienne joue le rôle clef d'un carrefour entre les civilisations de l'Eurasie qui ont eues des relations et des échanges variables entre les âges du Bronze et du Fer.

Le colloque a pour objectif de confronter les données des recherches récentes afin de mieux connaître les séquences d'occupation des régions voisines de la mer Caspienne durant les âges du Bronze récent et du Fer et la manière dont la complexité culturelle s'est mise en place au cours du temps. Ces régions semblent avoir développé une identité culturelle propre. Il s'agit de faire un état des connaissances des parties occidentale, méridionale et orientale de la Caspienne concernant l'organisation spatiale des sites d'habitat et des nécropoles, les pratiques funéraires, les cultures matérielles, ainsi que de discuter des relations interculturelles qui ont pu s'exercer entre les pays du Caucase, l'Iran et l'Asie centrale.

Archaeological activities have considerably developed during the last years around the Caspian Sea including the Caucasus, Iran and Turkmenistan. These areas have a very diverse environmental and cultural diversity resulting of several millennia of human interaction The Caspian Sea has acted as a crossroad between Eurasian civilizations that have had variable exchanges between the Bronze and Iron Age.

The goal of this conference is to confront recent archaeological data from this region for a better understanding of the human occupation sequence during the Late Bronze Age and Iron Age and the way the cultural complexity has established in time. These areas have developed a specific cultural identity during these periods. Mains topic of interest are the spatial organization of the settlements and the necropolis, the funerary practices, the material cultures, environment and subsistence economies, as well as a critical discussion on intercultural dynamics between the Caucasus, Iran and Central Asia.
